**Reported in local currency. The gross portfolio yield is calculated as the weighted sum off all portfolio securities. For each security we calculate yields using Bloomberg. Hybrids are in general priced to first call. Contribution from cash is calculated applying the average monthly weight and bank account yield at month end. For distressed securities, priced around 50 or lower, we apply zero or running cash yield when applicable. The portfolio yield is then adjusted to reflect FX hedges, applying an annualized internal rate of return (IRR) from monthly FX contracts at month end. First, all assets are hedged back to the fund base currency. Second, the base currency exposure is converted to share class currency exposure to reflect the corresponding share class yields. Gross portfolio yield might change from day to day and is as such no guarantee for future return.

*From launch of the share class. All figures are based on internationally recognised standards for publishing performance data. Historical returns are no guarantee for future returns. Future returns will depend, inter alia, on, market developments, the portfolio manager's skill, the fund's risk profile, as well as fees for subscription, management and redemption. Returns may become negative as a result of negative price developments. The performance data do not take account of the fees incurred on subscription and redemption of units/shares.

The main focus during the month was on the Fed, which announced its key interest rate decision. The outcome was a 50 basis point cut, signalling the start of its rate cut cycle. We had expected the Fed to start more calmly with a 25 basis point cut, but the justification from the Fed was that the labour market is showing signs of weakness and therefore a double cut was justified. Furthermore, the central bank believes that a recession is not in the cards and showed an interest rate curve that implies two cuts in 2024, four cuts in 2025 and two more cuts in 2026.

Towards the end of September, China announced a large stimulus package of fiscal, monetary and property-related stimuli aimed at stimulating demand, recovering the economy and stabilising asset prices at the same time. The announcement induced a large positive shift among the investor collective and will raise economic growth in the short term.

The primary market has started after the holidays, with the Nordics in particular standing out with very high activity. The fund invested in one company in the primary market, Belgian Azelis, which is a globally leading supplier of chemical ingredients to customers in several sectors. Furthermore, the company was ranked number 1 in ESG among 205 competitors in the same industry by Sustainalytics 2023.

September was a good month for the fund, driven by the good cash return and lower market rates.

The fund is classified as an article 9 fund under the SFDR Disclosure Regulation.
