Monthly commentary – November 2021

By Øyvind Hamre and Thomas Larsen

November ended on a negative note with the news of the discovery of a new coronavirus variant in South Africa. The high number of mutations on the new variant discovered is a source of concern, but it is premature to draw any conclusions with respect to the potential future impact on financial markets and the economy.

PNCB's return for the month was marginally negative, primarily driven by increased uncertainties from the new coronavirus variant. Interest rates fell across the curve, reversing most of the increases seen last month. A large part of the fund's holdings have now published their Q3 reports, with few negative surprises.

The fund continues to have a solid liquidity position and low exposure to industries directly affected by potential new lockdowns and travel restrictions. It is also important to highlight that a high share of the fund's portfolio is exposed to the Nordic region, where the impact from Covid-19 is currently less severe than in several other European countries which have imposed comprehensive restrictions on their populations.

PNCB participated in four primary issues during the month, of which two were new holdings. We did not exit any holdings, but we increased our exposure to three issuers in the secondary market. Five bonds were called without being replaced by new bonds during the month: Jacob Holm & Sønner A/S (industry), Infront ASA (TMT), Hoist Group Holding Interessenter AB (TMT), AX V Nissens ApS (automotive), and IA Hedin Bil AB (consumer cyclical).

Primary market activity was significantly lower in November than in previous months. 20 issuers tapped the market for the equivalent of NOK 13 billion, compared to NOK 35 billion in October. There are, however, a high number of transactions which have been announced in November but not yet closed. Six companies were first time issuers in November compared to 11 last month. The new issues in November were as last month spread across most sectors, with real estate and finance standing out with respect to both volume and number of transactions. Most of the new issues in November were denominated in SEK.

The new issuers we added in November were Caybon Holding AB (TMT) and NTC Infrastructure AS (consumer services), while we added to our existing exposure in Wallenius Wilhelmsen ASA (shipping) and AFRY AB (business services).
