Monthly commentary – July 2022

By Øyvind Hamre and Thomas Larsen

July was, as expected, a quiet month in the Nordic high-yield market, reflecting the Nordic holiday season. Price development for Pareto Nordic Corporate Bond was positive in July, with a total return for the month above the fund's current yield, primarily driven by credit spread tightening. Volatility in International equity and credit markets generally decreased during the month. Interest rates also dropped, most notably at the longest end of the curves.

We are cautiously optimistic with respect to the outlook for Pareto Nordic Corporate Bond, based on the significant repricing that occurred during the first half of the year. In addition, the return potential has been lifted by rising interest rates due to fund's high share of floating rate notes. However, we acknowledge the increased macroeconomic uncertainty. The fund's investment philosophy is to invest for the long-term based on sound credit fundamentals and not to speculate in short-term price movements. In addition, we strive to minimise risk by having a diversified portfolio with low single-name exposure. The fund's largest subsector exposure at the end of July was software and IT services (7.6% of AUM).

There was no major company news or credit events during the month for our portfolio companies. The quarterly reports that have been published so far have mostly been as expected, evident by no or only marginal movement in bond prices.

Primary market activity was low in July, which is typically the slowest period of the year in the Nordic market. Two issuers tapped the market for the equivalent of NOK 775 million, as compared to six issuers tapping the market for NOK 4,775 million in July last year. Total issued volume for the first seven months of 2022 ended at NOK 45 billion, against NOK 118 billion in the same period in 2021. Note that the primary market activity was exceptionally high in 2021, with issue volume close to twice as high as in previous peak years. Pareto Nordic Corporate Bond did not participate in any primary transactions in July and has participated in five out of a total of 74 primary transactions year-to-date.
